

"I am a proud owner of 53 goats and a healthy guarding dog and through my small stock production, I was able to build my family a house in Karakubis, sell some goats to electrify my house and also buy livestock vaccines."

Naomi Toromba
– farmers' network member and LGD recipient

"Before the programme, all I knew was that cheetahs and lions and rhinos and other animals were dangerous. Now I love them."

Carol Letebeic – (10 year old participant at our bush camps)

"I would lose approximately 4 goats a month and that was hard on me. I wanted to give up farming until the day I met CCB and I was privileged to be given a well-trained dog. With pleasure, I tell you this dog is doing well. It has chased away all jackals and other predators in my area. I no longer worry about losing my goats to wild predators. I thank CCB for this livestock guard dog programme. It is a positive support to farmers and I recommend it to anyone with predator problems."

Batshidi Tsae
– farmers' network member and LGD recipient

"It's because of you (CCB) and the work that you do here that these students are performing so well at school."

Keene Ramotsana – (deputy headteacher at Bere Primary School – recipients of CCB's education activities)

Conserving Botswana's Cheetah Population

PROMOTING COEXISTENCE

A species under threat

Humans are responsible for halving the world's cheetah population since the year 2000. A combination of habitat destruction, the illegal wildlife trade, and human-wildlife conflict is pushing this species to the brink of extinction. With only 7,100 cheetahs left on the planet, the time is now to save this species from extinction. The western Kalahari has the highest density of cheetahs in the country and this is where we focus our work.

A dedicated organisation

Established in 2003, Cheetah Conservation Botswana (CCB) has committed itself to working with communities to coexist with the Kalahari's carnivores. With close working relationships with Botswana's Government, community-based organisations and other civil society partners in the region, CCB engages all relevant stakeholders to create sustainable, practical community-based solutions to the threats facing cheetahs and other carnivore species. The organisation has a small but highly committed and dedicated staff complement of 18 (including interns and volunteers) spread between the Gaborone headquarters, Ghanzi field base, and Maun satellite office.
